The first photo of my arrival... I wanted now to teach at this school. The professor is called Mamata Jain. There are 77 children and all do not come to class. I have two classes of 30 students.

I go 10 hours and 16 hours with half an hour for a simple meal. It is hard, I do them full of activities, we clean the classroom every day because there are frogs every day in class. Children open the windows and put the mat on the floor.

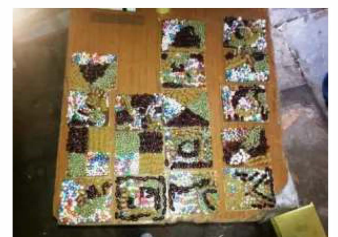

At the beginning of the course were very curious but children with the novelty became very excited especially with games because I reward them with stickers.

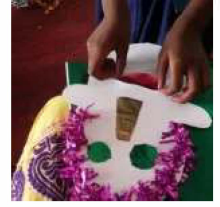

They scramble to enter the class I have discipline and make them put 2 by 2 at the door and silently return to the class. They made a lot of progress in English we sing we dance we colour with markers... We play by learning... I tell them about good manners and I look at their hands and their face.

I see some progress... They bicker more in class and I give them responsibilities... They are happy... They are awarded for their progress by pencils of colours of the images etc... They call me Urvashi mam ... all the time...

They are happy to learn and still want more... Days ago or I am very tired but if happy I am attached to these kids... I put their designs on the wall and hang the courses. Ananda did three tables or they can sit to write and draw.

I give them a few classes with computer-made drawings on the paint program and watch the video in Hindi on the manners of washing hands and the body. They sing a kills head: old mac Donald and brothers Jacques and gestural ABCD and also apple happy... They love to sing...

I draw hopscotch they love to play... They play jacks also... The race has been a cart, the go train, the race has the giraffe... I have decreased my days, I will on Monday and Tuesday morning because the school is three kilometres and it is difficult for me...

Before Diwali, I gave them various small things such as kits and stickers and pencils... They use poured on my hands so they have nothing... And all of a sudden they receive a small gift... I love them and miss them.
